protounces the road from here to Wingate a fine freight route for ox teams. A little riquired, otherwise the route is an excellent natural road. The hill from Beaver Head to the top of the Mogollon mountains is not as difficult as that of Copper Canyon. He learned at Fort Wingate that the miliing in the matter of procuring an appropriation for a military road from Fort Garland to Fort Wingate, which is all that is refrom the East to Presentt.

He found the route from Wingate back to Prescott very interesting. He passed through a very large portion of the Navajoe with immense flocks of sheep and goats and herds of horses. At one camp near the mouth of the Canyon de Chelly he saw two or three thousand sheep and goats and several hundred head of horses driven to Canyon de Chelly to see the remarkable scenery, and found the Canyon populated with Indians, having large cornfields and peach orchards and flocks of sheep and goats, and herds of horses. In fact, everywhere that he met Indians they seemed to be industrious and thrifty. The Puerca was also quite populous with these thrifty Indians. He found the Moquis also well to do, with fine looking crops of corn and disadvantages for wood and water. He thinks the Moquis offer a fine field for the humanitarians and missionaries who are so become rich. Under present circumstances they have a hard struggle for existence. great scarcity of water.
